

What is the fictitious truth, and why is this of interest to you?

My fictitious truth is that plants can read your thoughts and feel your emotions. They react to them as well. This is of interest to me because I think idea of plants, which are living things, being able to connect on a personal level with humans is cool. I'm not super into plants / gardening but I do like supernatural plant stuff in media. I kinda do believe in karma so a certain level, so maybe in my fictitious truth I can show how dangerous it can be to double cross a plant.

What is the fictitious organization/entity that is presenting this material?

The organization that is presenting this material will be a rouge group of botanists / phytologists who broke away from the labs they were stationed at and they curated their own lab out of stolen material in a secret location. They aim to tell people the truth about plants in hopes that we can treat them better and so we can use them to pass along important information. We could also use them to interrupt important information lines between government officials because the government already knows this about plants and has been using them for this reason for decades.

How could this project become a "benevolent untruth"?

I'm not sure if you mean how could someone stumble upon this and believe it for real, or if you mean how could someone in the fake universe stumble upon it and just write it off as a benevolent untruth but I can answer it to the best of my ability.

It's widely belived in real life that talking to you plants helps them grow better because they feel the love / emotion you're putting in to talking to them. Those people could stumble onto a something like this project and not know that the idea itself has been heavily fabricated. There's nothing benvolent about it yet, but people could use the idea of the government knowing this and not sharing it as a way to get angry at gov. officials and it could cause a lot of issues for them personally. Thanks to the internet, incorrect information gets presented as true all the time so Im sure this could become a benevolent truth about plants that convinces people that every plant literally can hear them, see them, and even feel emotions towards them.
